THE STELE

— A Visual Record —

The Code of Hammurabi is inscribed on a single black basalt stele standing 2.25 metres tall. It was excavated at Susa, Iran in 1901 by a French archaeological mission led by Jacques de Morgan, and has been housed at the Musée du Louvre, Paris (inventory Sb 8) ever since.

The upper third of the stele bears a carved relief showing Hammurabi standing before Shamash, the Babylonian sun-god and god of justice, who hands him the rod and ring — symbols of divine authority and righteous rule. The remaining surface is covered in 4,130 lines of cuneiform script arranged in columns.

The following pages show photographs of the stele as it appears today. All images are in the public domain and sourced from Wikimedia Commons.

SOURCES AND EDITORIAL NOTE

Transliterations

The transliterations for the Prologue are drawn from Robert Francis Harper, The Code of Hammurabi, King of Babylon (University of Chicago Press, 1904), pp. 2–8 — a foundational scholarly edition based on direct examination of the stele. Transliterations for Laws § 1–20 are from John Huehnergard, A Grammar of Akkadian, Third Edition (Eisenbrauns, 2011), pp. 277–280, one of the authoritative modern references for Old Babylonian Akkadian. Both sources follow standard Assyriology conventions: determinatives are indicated in superscript (here rendered inline), uncertain readings are marked, and logograms appear in small capitals.

Cuneiform Script

The original cuneiform inscription is preserved on a black diorite stele now housed at the Louvre Museum, Paris (Sb 8). The cuneiform text as photographed and drawn by Eugen Bergmann, Codex Hammurabi: Textus Primigenius (Pontificium Institutum Biblicum, Rome, 1953) serves as the scholarly standard for the sign sequences. Because the stele inscription cannot be reproduced as standard Unicode with full fidelity, this edition presents the attested transliteration rather than a potentially inaccurate Unicode rendering. Facsimile images of each passage are available at ehammurabi.org.

English Translations

English translations follow Mervyn E.J. Richardson, Hammurabi's Laws: Text, Translation and Glossary (T & T Clark International, 2004), with occasional reference to Huehnergard (2013). Richardson's edition is considered one of the most carefully glossed modern translations available.

Translation

When the lofty Anu, king of the Anunnaki, and Bel, lord of heaven and earth, he who determines the destiny of the land, committed the rule of all mankind to Marduk, the chief son of Ea; when they made him great among the Igigi; when they pronounced the lofty name of Babylon; when they made it famous among the quarters of the world and in its midst established an everlasting kingdom whose foundations were firm as heaven and earth — at that time, Anu and Bel called me, Hammurabi, the exalted prince, the worshiper of the gods, to cause justice to prevail in the land, to destroy the wicked and the evil, to prevent the strong from oppressing the weak, to go forth like the Sun over the Black Head Race, to enlighten the land and to further the welfare of the people.

When Marduk sent me to rule the people and to bring help to the country, I established law and justice in the land and promoted the welfare of the people. Accordingly:

Translation

The righteous laws, which Hammurabi, the wise king, established and (by which) he gave the land stable support and pure government. Hammurabi, the perfect king, am I. I was not careless, nor was I neglectful of the Black-Head people, whose rule Bel presented and Marduk delivered to me. I provided them with a peaceful country. I opened up difficult barriers and lent them support. With the powerful weapon which Za-ma-ma and Nana entrusted to me, with the breadth of vision which Ea allotted me, with the might which Marduk gave me, I expelled the enemy to the North and South; I made an end of their raids; I brought health to the land; I made the populace to rest in security; I permitted no one to molest them.

Let any oppressed man, who has a cause, come before my image as king of righteousness! Let him read the inscription on my monument! Let him give heed to my weighty words! And may my monument enlighten him as to his cause and may he understand his case!

In the days that are yet to come, for all future time, may the king who is in the land observe the words of righteousness which I have written upon my monument! May he not alter the judgments of the land which I have pronounced, or the decisions of the country which I have rendered! May he not efface my statues! If that man have wisdom, if he wish to give his land good government, let him give attention to the words which I have written upon my monument! And let him rightly rule his Black-Head people; let him pronounce judgments for them and render for them decisions! Let him root out the wicked and evildoer from his land! Let him promote the welfare of his people!

May the great gods of heaven and earth, the Anunnaki in their assembly, curse with blighting curses the wall of the temple, his seed, his land, his army, his people, and his troops! May Bel with his command which cannot be altered curse him with a powerful curse and may it come upon him speedily!
